Fundraisers at Highgate Cemetery estimate that their beleaguered gardeners have spent an average of two hours a day for the last few weeks trying to defend themselves from the uninvited deliverymen. Worried the men will never return, the cemetery's 50 gardeners have taken to their social media pages to post pleas for help and get more tombstone deliveries. However, the American cemetery has been left reeling after having to deal with lengthy financial losses, the result of the failure to fully pay for the burial remains for some of those buried there. "We have gardens that are too small to hold the burial graves, and the remains are rarely put into niches," said Gabrielle Bass, a spokeswoman for Highgate Cemetery. "
